

Mapping Jihad-ly: Jurisdictional Encounters in Medieval Islamic Law

Anver M. Emon is Professor and Canada Research Chair in Religion, Pluralism, and the Rule of Law at the University of Toronto, Faculty of Law

While the term ‘jihad’ all too invokes imagery of militancy, violence, and warfare, premodern Muslim jurists drew upon the idea of jihad to develop a legal map of the terrain of governance. The discussion will examine the implications of jurisdiction in recasting the meaning of jihad and thereby bringing into the study of Islam insights from legal geography.
